Vail and Beaver Creek will host the 2015 FIS Alpine World Ski Championships

This will be the third FIS World Championships for Vail Resorts, which previously hosted the 1989 and 1999 Championships.

“Our resorts and the Vail Valley have demonstrated a meaningful commitment to the sport of ski racing producing the best competitions in the world. We are thrilled to focus international attention on our iconic slopes and community during the winter of 2015,” said Rob Katz, chairman and chief executive officer of Vail Resorts.

Vail and Beaver Creek Resorts have been supporting and hosting international ski racing events and World Cups since the circuit began in 1967. Today, the Birds of Prey World Cup at Beaver Creek stands as one of the most highly respected and most difficult stops on the men's World Cup tour and it is the only men's event held in the United States.

The course was built during the summer of 1997 in preparation for the 1999 World Championships. The first men's World Cup took place in December 1997 and speed and technical events are held annually at Beaver Creek each December.

With the 2015 announcement, Beaver Creek plans to upgrade the Birds of Prey venue, increasing the finish area for the men's events, building a new Red Tail Camp Restaurant; and, building a new women's speed course which will rival the men's course. This run also will serve the combined events and the nation's team event during the 2015 Championships. The women's technical events, including the giant slalom and slalom will be held at Vail which will have a new, dramatic stadium located in the heart of Vail Village. Opening and closing ceremonies also will take place in Vail.
